FOREWORD

This guide provides ideas for concrete, actionable ways to disrupt the work of white supremacist groups and institutions. These ideas are, of course, dependent on local context—we encourage you to take what will work in your local community.

And as we take action to expose, disrupt, and respond to white nationalists and white supremacists, we must also focus energy on building a new world—a world rooted in liberation for all, rather than oppression and violence. SURJ believes that the work of those of us who are white is to bring our people into an irresistible movement for liberation alongside people of color. This means that we must disrupt white supremacists and white supremacy, and it also means that we must do the work of building communities and movements that are welcoming, nurturing, and meaningful. We must recruit and support white folks experiencing pain under our current economic system. And we must develop systems and policies that meet the needs of our people more fully and more joyfully than what white supremacists are offering. We hope this guide is a first (or second or third) entry point into this work, and we look forward to building with you.

—Showing Up for Racial Justice

INTRODUCTION

In January 2017, when Alt Right leader Richard Spencer was clocked in the face on camera amid the protests against Donald Trump's inauguration, a contentious public argument broke out over whether it was right to "punch a Nazi." After the large fascist-led rally in Charlottesville, Virginia in August 2017, which ended with an anti-racist activist murdered in a car attack, the conversation raged again.

But lost in this Yes or No argument about "Nazi punching" is encouraging people to use the many legal, community-based actions available to fight White Nationalists. When critics say, "You can only fight hate speech with more speech," intentionally or not they are actively discouraging people from engaging in these other, concrete actions. While words play an important part of any political movement, they can never take the place of concrete work in the real world.

This guide offers forty actions—the majority of which are available to people of all backgrounds, identities, and skill levels—which help to contain and neutralize White Nationalist organizing, as well as the damage it inflicts to communities.

How terms are used in this guide

White Nationalism, in capital letters, is a specific political movement on the furthest end of the right-wing. Its members consciously want to maintain or increase White social, economic, cultural, and political power. This is the "organized racist" movement, and includes politicians in suits, sieg-heiling Nazi skinheads, preppy Alt Right trolls, and hood-wearing Klansmen.

This political movement is the most explicit and self-conscious part of the system of White Supremacy, which is found throughout our society. This includes everything from organized racist groups to the unconscious ways even well-meaning White people treat people of color. However, White Nationalism is also different from the description of the United States being based on white nationalism (in lower-case). This refers to how the United States is a settler-colonial country that has primarily acted in the interests of people of European descent. People of color have always been subjected to oppression, including extermination and enslavement.

However, White Nationalism doesn't just a focus on people of color. Almost all White Nationalists demonize and attack Jews, Muslims, LGBTQ people, and feminists—as well as leftists and other political opponents.

There are also many other Far Right groups with politics similar to White Nationalism, but which stop just short of embracing an explicitly racist worldview. These include the "Alt Light," who share the general approach of the openly racist Alt Right, but allow in people of color, Jews, and gay men. Other Far Right factions include the Patriot movement and armed militias; vigilante border patrols; right-wing Islamophobes, antisemites, and other conspiracy theorists; anti-immigration activists; Men's Rights Activists; and Christian nationalists.

The tactics in this guide are designed to be used against outright White Nationalists. While many can be used against these other groups, some of them aren't as effective. (For dealing with Patriot movement and militia groups, see "Organizing for an Oregon Where Everyone Counts" in the resource list below.)

Last is the question of danger. Many of these suggestions are completely safe, although others present some danger.

I. GET STARTED

1. Learn who White Nationalists are and how they organize

The first thing to do is educate yourself about the specifics of organized racist movements. White Nationalism is just like any other political movement: it is composed of individuals and groups who organize around specific issues, have talking points, create organizations and political networks, seek to recruit new members, and try to influence the larger society.

White Nationalism may seem like a single movement without divisions, but members are often involved in squabbles and refuse to work with each other. While they are all part of the same forest, you want to be able to identify them as specific trees—something you will need to know when cutting them back.

Information is readily available that outlines what White Nationalist politics and organizing looks like. (The end of this guide includes further readings.) In addition, to the extent that you can stomach it, read and watch White Nationalist articles, books, and videos. This will help you get a feel for how they talk, look, and think.

2. Work with others to oppose White Nationalists

While there are national organizations that look at White Nationalist organizing, they can't track what's going on every community. That's where you come in! This is a lot of work, and so it's best to do it with like-minded activists. Especially at first, this should be done anonymously, even if you eventually plan to do public work. (This is true even if you are already known as a progressive activist—don't reveal your new line of work.) Anonymity will enhance your ability to collect information and help protect your safety. Also, make sure that you don't duplicate work others are already doing. There will be more than enough tasks to go around, so coordinate and specialize where needed.

The most dangerous position is to be publicly outspoken and be easily identifiable. Make sure visible activists have their digital and real-life security locked down, and that their family members—such as children—are not in vulnerable positions.

3. Start monitoring local White Nationalist activity

One of the most important things you can do is to monitor local White Nationalist organizing. Decide what area you will track—for example, a specific city—and start monitoring them. This means documenting their groups, projects, social media accounts, periodicals, meetings, and other events. White nationalists tend to organize under the radar, so this usually requires a good bit of sleuthing. Start with any public media accounts (like websites and Twitter accounts), but also create fake social media accounts appropriate for infiltrating White Nationalist groups.

Collect their names, social media accounts, pictures, home addresses, work information, and any other relevant identification—including criminal records, organizational affiliations, and political events they have attended. While many times this information can be found online, you should also monitor their presence at rallies and, if possible, send infiltrators into their meetings.

II. TAKE ACTION

4. Release your research

After you get a lay of the land and collect intelligence, figure out how you will leverage it for maximum impact. Despite the rightward lurch in the United States, outing White Nationalists still directly impacts their lives.

Some groups maintain blogs where they release information on White Nationalists either as it's collected, or after their events. In the past, local monitoring groups would release annual reports of activity in their area. Alternately, keep your work quiet and release the information directly to local journalists or other interested parties. Professional journalists usually have far more impact than activists, who release information on their own, do.

5. Counter White Nationalist organizing

White Nationalists are very aggressive organizers, and you will have to play hardball against them. Do not hesitate to use all of the legal options at your disposal in this fight. If you are not ready, they can run you over, and they are not shy about using violence to achieve their goals.

Like all political actors, White Nationalists pick specific communities to recruit from. These might include targeting neighborhoods, religious groups, or cultural scenes. They also engage in organizing drives, such as flyering on college campuses. (For suggestions on countering White Nationalist rallies, which are uncommon but intense situations, see Section IV.)

Once you have identified your targets, challenge them for control over that area. Even in White Nationalists' core areas of support, make sure their efforts don't go uncontested. Whenever possible, support efforts from inside those communities that push back against White Nationalism.

For example, if they are recruiting from a specific neighborhood, you should spread information with opposition material, either through leafleting or a door-to-door campaign, and call a neighborhood meeting to discuss the issue. When White Nationalists recruit from specific social groups, promote resistance from inside the same groups. Antiracist skinheads, Heathen religious practitioners, and soccer fans have all formed groups to oppose White Nationalists inside their communities.

6. Push institutions to oppose White Nationalism

When institutions have members who are involved in White Nationalism, or are being targeted for recruitment, push the institutions to renounce them. For example, the Southern Baptist Convention adopted a resolution condemning the Alt Right and white supremacy in June 2017. After Charlottesville, Showing Up for Racial Justice (SURJ) asked the University of Virginia to revoke the diplomas of two alumni: Jason Kessler, the rally's organizer, and Richard Spencer, the headline speaker.

7. Make it difficult for White Nationalists to appear in public

The First Amendment guarantees that the government cannot interfere with protected speech. However, owners of private spaces can decide who gets to use them. Therefore, one of the most effective tactics is to pressure venues—including conference spaces, concert or lecture halls, galleries, camping sites, and restaurants—to refuse to rent space to White Nationalists. Often a venue will refuse to cancel a booking out of greed. In this case, useful tactics include pressure campaigns (like asking supporters to contact the space on a particular day), and, if necessary, boycotts.

Be sure to follow through with any boycott threats. A business that closes after refusing to cancel a White Nationalist event is gold. You can bring the story to new venues when explaining how it is in their financial interest to cancel White Nationalist events.

8. Refute their talking points

White Nationalists are skilled at introducing slogans and talking points into political debate. These include false and myths propaganda about "white genocide," black-on-black crime, and Jewish control of the media. Debating White Nationalists publicly can make their lies look worthy of consideration. But having a list of common White Nationalist talking points—along with rebuttals to them—gives community members ammunition to win personal arguments. And when people who have previously accepted bigoted propaganda are in a space of questioning, they can discover facts about these false claims.

9. Remove and replace White Nationalist propaganda

White Nationalists frequently sticker and flyer city streets, college campuses, and bars. When this happens, hit the streets immediately, remove their propaganda, and replace it with your own messaging of justice and equality. This will both send a message to the White Nationalists that they have opposition, and will also give you an opportunity to spread your own views.

10. Utilize available legal avenues

Both lawyers and governments can hamper White Nationalists. If this is in line with your political views, you may consider using legal avenues. Authorities in Leith, North Dakota destroyed property owned by White Nationalists that was not up to code. Richard Spencer's National Policy Institute lost its non-profit status after they failed to file their required paperwork. The Southern Poverty Law Center has successfully sued and bankrupted several major White Nationalist groups, and is currently suing neo-Nazi propagandist Andrew Anglin. More recently, two lawsuits have hampered the Charlottesville rally participants. White Nationalists have trouble finding lawyers, and even if they win, lawsuits can drain their financial resources and drag on for years.

11. Pressure White Nationalists at home and work

After identifying key members, such as organizers and those with violent histories, pressure on them by flyering, and conducting door-knocking and letter-mailing campaigns, in their neighborhood. Demonstrations can held in front of people's houses, a tactic used against Nazi war criminals living in the United States. Ask local stores to refuse service to White Nationalists and ask employers to fire them. White Nationalists who have recently been outed and lost their jobs include: teachers at both a middle and high school; a Marine; a graphic designer; an electrician; a mortgage broker; and an aerospace engineer with a government security clearance.

Contact community and professional groups White Nationalists are involved in and ask that they be barred and that these groups denounce White Nationalism in general or even the individual in specific. In one case, where a violent adult White Nationalist lived with his mother, she was pressured to kick him out.

12. Target White Nationalist financial and communication infrastructure

Political movements need digital and real-world infrastructure in order to take donations, sell merchandise, communicate with members, and spread their political views. Depriving them of these resources significantly damages their ability to function. Unless they host their own digital resources, White Nationalists rely on private technology companies for services. But these companies have no legal obligation to provide them with services, and can be pressured to do the right thing.

This can include reporting social media accounts that engage in Code of Conduct violations. Digital companies that have removed White Nationalist accounts include Twitter, Facebook, Amazon, Etsy, Twitter, PayPal, and SoundCloud—even dating apps like OkCupid. Before Charlottesville, AirBnB cancelled reservations made by people intent on attending the rally. But in most cases these companies removed accounts only when pressured. Find, join, or promote campaigns to keep these platforms free of White Nationalist content. One group developed an app and then held an event where people reported online White Nationalist content together. (See the “No Platform For Fascism Tool Kit” in the resource list.)

While stories of secretive old rich men financing White Nationalists are exaggerated, occasionally they are true. But regardless of who is giving them money, you can work to track White Nationalists' financial support. For example, non-profits and election campaigns must be transparent about certain financial transactions. David Duke's 2016 Senate campaign attracted donations from across the country, and those who gave at least $100 are public information, and some of them then received community pressure. Billionaire Robert Mercer resigned as co-CEO of his hedge fund after it was revealed that Milo Yiannopoulos—who Mercer funded—had direct contact with White Nationalists.

13. Prevent White Nationalists from coming to progressive events

White Nationalists show up at progressive events to disrupt them or spy on attendees. Since 2017, White Nationalists and other Far Right activists have disrupted anti-oppression trainings, women's marches, protest planning meetings, and May Day events. They have started fights and filmed people in order to identify and harass them later. As this is dangerous to participants, immediately remove known White Nationalists. Have a security team at rallies who can act as a buffer between White Nationalists who seek to antagonize our activists. If White Nationalists are trying to film, holding a large fabric banner in front of them is an effective and non-confrontational way to ruin their shot.

14. Drive wedges between White Nationalists and other political groups

Despite the slippage, the taboo largely remains against mainstream conservatives collaborating with blatant White Nationalists and antisemites. When White Nationalists attempt to join more moderate conservative groups, out them and push the conservatives to exclude them. White Nationalists will even join progressive groups around issues like Palestine, Syria, and criticism of Wall Street. Make sure you expose this “entryism” and push them out.

15. Find new allies in your community

If there is White Nationalist organizing in your community, make this an opportunity to speak to a larger range of people than you are normally in political engagement with. A completely law-abiding group will have far more options regarding who you can work with than even the best-organized, but openly radical, group.

Since White Nationalists threaten so many different kinds of people, turn this to your advantage by seeking allies among those they target, and those who have other reasons to be opposed to them. These include: religious groups; the LGBTQ community; feminists and reproductive rights advocates; Jewish, Muslim, Sikh, and other minority religious groups; immigrants and refugee rights organizations; business associations; fraternal groups and professional organizations; musicians, artists, and actors; labor unions; Black, Latino, Asian-American, Native American, and other racial/ethnic groups; and organizations that memorialize historical crimes like slavery, lynchings, the Holocaust, and the Native American genocide.

Offer to speak to these groups. Use this as an opportunity to see how these communities perceive the threat of White Nationalist organizing, and ask what kind of support they would like.

16. Organize anti-racist bar crawls

Especially if White Nationalists are drinking in public, host an anti-racist bar crawl which goes to their hangouts. Not only do social events help build relationships, a bar crawl puts racists on notice that their spots are known and makes it clear to the bars that they have a problem. Similarly, sometimes people will declare an area a “Nazi Free Zone” and patrol it to make sure it stays that way.

17. Help White Nationalists leave the movement

White Nationalists are part of our society. While it is possible to isolate them, the only way to actually make them go away is to get them to get out. “Exit programs” help facilitate this, such as Life After Hate and the Free Radicals Project, where former White Nationalists help current ones who want to leave the movement. Promote these groups, and encourage and help White Nationalists transition into a different life.

III. BE PROACTIVE

Too often, progressives lurch from crisis to crisis, with limited planning or infrastructure. When countering White Nationalism, it's important to be prepared. This is complex work, and there is a level of danger involved that can be reduced with good planning.

18. Be proactive in putting your message out

Whether through flyers, stickers, posters, or yard signs, make your community's opposition to racist and bigoted ideas visible. White Nationalist organizers are less likely to move in if a community is already visibly opposed to them.

19. Hold educational programs

Organize public talks, reading groups, and classes. You can discuss what White Nationalism is, what the movement looks like at present, and how to resist it. Many experts are willing to travel to talk to activists, but also consider doing a video call for in-person gatherings if bringing speakers to your town is too difficult.

20. Host memorial events

Almost all communities have histories of White Nationalist violence. Hold events memorializing the victims or talking about past events and how they contribute to the present. Examples can include holding a procession to the graves of those killed by White Nationalists, or a memorial at the site of a murder. You can put on events to remember mass racist violence, such as lynchings, church bombings, or racial expulsions.

21. Host cultural events

Concerts, art auctions, plays, and similar events are ideal ways to get cultural workers involved. These can be an opportunity for fundraising and spreading information to sympathetic people who may not be directly in activist circles.

22. Organize first aid, self-defense, and security trainings

It's good to equip your community with skills that may be necessary when opposing White Nationalists. These include: first aid; bystander interventions; self-defense and weapon skills; and basic home, digital, and personal security. These trainings also function as outreach opportunities and places to find people who are serious about doing pragmatic work.

23. Form an emergency response team

If White Nationalists are organizing in your area, there will eventually be emergencies, as violence is central to their movement. You will also get last-minute calls when they hold unannounced events. Prepare an emergency response team with members who commit to being contacted at any time, and agree to quickly respond. Ideally they should have appropriate skills, such as first aid and self-defense.

24. Recruit skilled people

There is a place for everyone who wants to oppose White Nationalists. At certain times, however, people with special skills are required, so recruit them ahead of time. This includes licensed security guards, graphic designers, lawyers, journalists, translators, and techies.

IV. COUNTER-DEMONSTRATE

The most contentious issue when dealing with White Nationalists is what to do when they hold public demonstrations. Larger ones are rare. In 2017, only three held by outright White Nationalists attracted at least 100 participants.

Communities are often split between those who want to react by: a) ignoring them, b) holding counter-events elsewhere, c) holding a legal and non-violent counter-demonstration, and d) taking a more confrontational approach. Although this debate is beyond the scope of this guide, the suggestions below address attending counter-demonstrations, while acting within the law.

25. Win the battle of public opinion

The good news is that there are only a small number of avowed White Nationalists. The bad news is that the number of people who actively organize against them isn't huge, either. White Nationalists and their opponents are both relatively small groups competing for a much larger pool of sympathizers. Counter-organizers seek the support of the larger progressive movement, as well as centrists and even moderate conservatives. Meanwhile, White Nationalists try to win over other Far Right factions, and have even been successful at gaining the support of liberals by skillful manipulation of "free speech" arguments. Therefore, you should engage in vigorous public debate to attempt to win converts to your side. Some suggested talking points are:

- White Nationalist violence is consistently underplayed as a murderous drumbeat in U.S. society. While every year White Nationalists almost always commit the highest number of murders, Islamists get wildly disproportionate media and government attention.
- Claims that violence is equal on "both sides" are absolutely false. Since 1990, the Far Right has killed over 450 people, while those opposed to it have killed one.
- Trump is empowering White Nationalists with his statements and policies. As long as he is president, they will benefit in terms of influence and recruitment.
- Ignoring problems does not make them go away. White Nationalists will try to take advantage of any situation—especially if they expect no resistance.
- Challenge commentators who condemn violence against White Nationalists but offer nothing in its place. Are they engaged in grassroots organizing or in aiding victims of White Nationalist violence? If they claim "more speech" is the answer, ask how they are using their speech to oppose White Nationalism. Are they, for example, following White Nationalist campus appearances with their own?

26. Push local officials to quash White Nationalist events

In areas where permits are required, pressure local governments to refuse or revoke permits for White Nationalist rallies. If they are using a privately owned space, pressure the owner to cancel the rental.

27. Organize a counter-demonstration

If White Nationalists are holding a public demonstration, get the opposition into the streets. In general, these counter-demonstrations can be organized in the usual manner. However, remain aware that public organizers are likely to be targeted for harassment by White Nationalists. You should also help safeguard information about supporters; for example, if you have a Facebook event page, make sure the invitation list is not visible.

Large demonstrations are a lot of work, and there are many things to do that don't involve going into the street. Help will be needed in establishing a convergence space; doing outreach to bolster attendance; holding fundraisers, both before and after, for the inevitable expenses; arranging transportation and housing for out-of-towners; setting up legal and communications support; and recruiting street medics.

28. Pressure local business and rental spaces

Talk to local businesses and encourage them to refuse service to White Nationalists. Circulate pictures of known members and symbols they usually wear. If they are planning on holding a private event, pressure the venue to cancel it. If you don't know where it is, warn local halls about suspicious bookings on that day. Hotels and other accommodations can also be warned against renting to White Nationalists coming from out of town.

29. Document participants in White Nationalist demonstrations

High-quality video and photography of White Nationalists who attend public events allows people to research individuals later and to document any criminal acts they engage in. A year after Charlottesville, White Nationalists who attended are still being identified, sometimes from grainy or obscured images. Be aware that capturing images of the necessary quality to identify people is a lot harder than it seems.

30. Don't be outgunned

If it is legal in your area and consistent with your beliefs, consider coming to the demonstration with firearms. Especially if the White Nationalists will be armed, there is an important psychological dimension to making it clear that both sides have weapons. This is best done in a group. Make sure that all members are in compliance with the law at all times. Also be sure to communicate your intentions to other counter-demonstration organizers ahead of time to work out any potential problems.

31. Refrain from attacking your allies

In the big picture, everyone who opposes White Nationalism is on the same side, despite tactical disagreements. While vigorous discussion is normal, there has been an unfortunate tendency for activists to viciously denounce each other, even at inappropriate times, such as after arrests. Instead of making your disagreements a public issue, simply ignore and work around those you disagree with.

Virginia to revoke the diplomas of two alumni: Jason Kessler, the rally's organizer, and Richard Spencer, the headline speaker.

V. BE SUPPORTIVE

Important support work can include helping those who White Nationalists threaten and harm, as well as their families. Counter-organizers can also end up entangled in legal proceedings and even incarcerated. In all of these cases, you should consult with the party in question, ask what they need, and allow them to make the decisions that affect their life.

32. Support people being threatened

White Nationalists love to threaten people. Support for those targeted might include escorting them or their children in public, running errands, or guarding their houses with weapons in case of an attack. Digitally, it may include helping them wipe

their online information, adding security to accounts, or investigating who is threatening them.

33. Establish a safe house

A safe house can be as simple as someone who is not known to White Nationalists, who will allow people to stay at their place in an emergency. This person needs to make sure they are available to be contacted at all times.

34. Aid the injured

Not only have over 450 people been killed by the Far Right since 1990, but thousands have been injured. Reach out to the victims and offer support; this includes contacting people you hear about in the news. Ask them what they need. Support may vary from helping them with money, lawyers, or errands, or it might be as simple as going out to do something relaxing with them. If the person wishes to go to the authorities, and if this is consistent with your beliefs, accompany them through the process. Make sure the incident is reported to organizations that track hate crimes.

35. Help the families of the murdered

In 2017, White Nationalists killed eighteen people in the United States. This means that hundreds of people lost family members that year to White Nationalist violence. Reach out and offer support. This may include raising money for funeral expenses, dealing with threats, or helping get their family's lives back together.

36. Have the backs of those targeted by the legal system

It is not uncommon for law enforcement to see White Nationalists more favorably than those who oppose them. Therefore, those working against White Nationalism often become entangled in the legal system, for example, by being subpoenaed to a grand jury, having charges filed against them, or going through a trial. These are stressful and often expensive events, and activists under legal pressure need support from their community.

37. Support imprisoned activists

Activists who refuse to testify before grand juries or are convicted of criminal offenses may end up in jail or prison, and this can be expensive. A prisoner can spend thousands of dollars a year on things like commissary expenses, phone calls, reading materials, and legal appeals. Their families may require day-to-day help or financial assistance to make prison visits. Make sure prisoners have contact with the outside world through letters, email, and phone calls. In addition to fundraising events, hold letter-writing events for prisoners.

38. Warn people who are threatened

White Nationalists are exceptionally violent in both word and deed, and you will discover threats against local groups and individuals. Be sure to warn these people about threats, while making sure your sources remain confidential if necessary.

39. Sunlight threats and attacks

Threats of political violence, regardless of whether they are carried out, can silence progressive political activists by driving them off social media and limiting their public appearances. And members of historically oppressed groups—including people of color, Jews, Muslims, women, and LGBTQ people—will get additional unwanted attention from White Nationalists.

Publicizing threats helps neutralize them. This exposes the violence of the White Nationalist movement, creates sympathy for those targeted; and helps drive wedges between the White Nationalists and those who are sympathetic to their propaganda—but balk at threatening those with different opinions.

IV. POSITION YOUR WORK

40. Embed your actions in a larger critique

Countering White Nationalists is a necessary, but not sufficient, part of the larger fight against inequality. It is comparable to pro bono lawyers who defend progressive activists. While this is a necessary action with real concrete effects, it will not destroy the pillars of the systemic oppressions that our social and political system is based on.

Position your work as part of a larger struggle against not just against White supremacy, but other forms of oppression. This might include structural racism in arrests, sentencing, and the school-to-prison pipeline; attacks on immigrants and refugees; Islamophobia and antisemitism; anti-LGBTQ movements; and misogyny. Try to act in conjunction with activists fighting these forms of oppression whenever possible. Make it clear that you are not just “against Nazis,” but that your actions are just a part of a larger struggle against hierarchy and oppression—and in support of equality and freedom—for everyone in our society.
